

Release of new 'education4peace' website

The National Centre for Peace and Conflict Studies (NCPACS), based at the University of Otago, and the Aotearoa NZ Peace and Conflict Studies Centre Trust (ANZPCSC) have developed an online resource to support New Zealand collaborations around education for peace – the sharing of information and exchange resources.

The NCPACS aims to work with teachers/curriculum groups to help develop relevant resources and capacity for the teaching of peace education in the New Zealand school curriculum. It also aims to link with existing organisations and individuals promoting peacefulness and nonviolence in New Zealand education contexts - to build the evidence base for peace education and to enhance learning and skills.

education4peace

<http://podcasts.otago.ac.nz/nzpeace-ed/>

Who is education4peace for?

People working in the early childhood, primary, secondary and tertiary sectors and people involved in programmes and initiatives contributing to education for peace.

What is the focus of education4peace?

Education for non-violence, human rights, and peaceful solutions and practices at all levels of the New Zealand national curriculum and more broadly for school communities and students.

How does education4peace work?

The site is interactive. Read and comment on blog posts. Access information and resources. Share resources, ideas and expertise. Subscribe to regular email updates or RSS feeds.

We hope this website will be dynamic and meet needs of teachers, early childhood educators, teacher educators and others involved in education contexts. Please contact us with any feedback or suggestions.

Elsbeth Macdonald (Peace Education Coordinator, NCPACS)
elsbeth.macdonald@otago.ac.nz